TODAY'S RUNDOWN SLOTS

THE LIST (2 stories)

■ Ted Lasso Is Coming Back—And Jason Sudeikis Changed His Mind

The Angle: The show everyone thought was dead is getting a fourth season. Sudeikis had an epiphany in early 2024 that convinced him there was more story to tell—and got the whole cast and crew to say yes to something they'd already said goodbye to.

- Jason Sudeikis convened the writers in Ojai, California in early February 2024 to revive the show after season three aired in 2023
- Season three was supposed to be the final season, but Sudeikis changed course and convinced the cast and creators to return
- Apple TV's Ted Lasso is described as a 'game-changing hit' that sparked major off-field drama during its original run

The Second-Act Question

- Have you ever quit something you loved and then realized you made a mistake—and actually gone back to fix it?

■ EU hits Google with $1 billion fine for Play Store abuses

The Angle: Europe's crackdown on Big Tech just got real—the EU slapped Google with a massive fine for using its dominance in search and app stores to squeeze out competitors. This is part of a broader pattern: regulators worldwide are finally finding their teeth against tech monopolies.

- European Commission fined Alphabet $890 million euros (about $1.01 billion USD or $1.43 billion CAD) on Thursday
- Penalties target Google Play Store and search violations—specifically leveraging market dominance to block competition
- This is one of several escalating EU enforcement actions against big tech under digital competition rules

The Reckoning Question

- Does a billion-dollar fine actually change how Google operates, or is it just a cost of doing business for them?

TRENDING TODAY

■ Trump's tariffs: Here's who's actually gonna feel the hit

The Angle: Trump's new tariff plans are sparking real questions about what Americans and Canadians will actually pay at the checkout counter. These three charts break down which industries, regions, and consumer goods are most exposed—and the debate over whether this helps or hurts the economy is heating up.

- Trump has announced tariff plans affecting major trading partners including Canada
- The tariffs are expected to hit specific sectors hardest—data visualization breaks down industry-by-industry impact

- Consumer goods, manufacturing, and cross-border trade are among the sectors most exposed to tariff pressure

The Reality Check

- What's the one product you buy regularly that you think tariffs will make way more expensive—and how mad are you actually going to be when it happens?

LIFESTYLE CHAT

■ Thousands of wildfire evacuees from Ontario First Nations face mental health crisis

The Angle: Over 2,800 people—many from remote First Nations communities—have been forced out by wildfires and are now struggling in unfamiliar cities, far from home, with real impacts on their mental and physical health. This is an ongoing displacement story that reveals gaps in how we support Indigenous communities in crisis.

- More than 2,800 wildfire evacuees across Ontario, many from First Nations communities
- Evacuees from Ontario's far north are being displaced hundreds of kilometres from home into unfamiliar urban areas
- Mental health and well-being challenges are a documented toll among those forced to leave their communities

The Real Impact

- When you're evacuated hundreds of kilometers from everything you know, it's not just about finding a place to sleep—what's the biggest toll you'd worry about?

Backup options:

■ Canada's new cigarette pack warnings get seriously graphic this summer

The Angle: Health Canada is mandating shocking visual warnings on every pack by August 1st—think real diseased lungs, not just text. Experts say the images actually work to change behavior, which raises a question: should this be the global standard, and does it cross a line, or is it finally honest?

- New graphic images on cigarette packs become mandatory in Canada by August 1st
- Health experts say the visual warnings create 'significant increases in the effectiveness' of health messaging
- The images show real consequences—diseased lungs and other graphic health impacts—rather than text-only warnings

The Blunt Take

- Do shock-value warnings actually make people quit, or are we just desensitizing smokers to the images on their daily pack?

■ Alberta's two-tier health care model sparks protest at premiers meeting

The Angle: Healthcare advocates are making noise at a major provincial conference, pushing Ottawa to tighten the purse strings and block provinces from building private clinics alongside public medicine. It's the ongoing tension between universal care purists and provinces looking for flexibility.

- Protesters are demanding the federal government increase health care funding to provinces
- Advocates want stricter conditions on how provinces spend federal health dollars

- The push is specifically targeting Alberta's dual practice model — allowing doctors to work in both public and private systems simultaneously

The Hot Take

- Should provinces be free to experiment with private options, or does any private tier fundamentally undermine universal health care?

CLOSER: THROWBACK THURSDAY

■ Motley Crue brings back Carnival of Sins to Toronto waterfront

The Angle: The legendary glam-metal bad boys are hitting the road for a 20th-anniversary run of one of rock's most infamous tours—a chance for longtime fans to relive the excess and spectacle that defined an era.

- Motley Crue is reviving the Carnival of Sins Tour, originally a milestone moment for the band two decades ago
- The tour is coming to Toronto's waterfront, bringing the classic heavy-metal experience to a new generation and old-school fans alike
- This marks the 20th-anniversary celebration of a tour that became legendary for its over-the-top production and rock-star antics

The Throwback Heat Check

- Were you at Motley Crue back in the day, or is this your first shot to catch them live—and what's the one song you need to hear?

■ Canadian premiers demand tariff battle plan from Carney

The Angle: With Trump's tariff threats looming, Canada's provincial leaders are pushing Prime Minister Mark Carney for clarity on how he'll actually negotiate with the U.S. — and what the fallout could look like for their own economies.

- Canadian premiers are meeting with Prime Minister Mark Carney on Thursday in Charlottetown, P.E.I.
- The sit-down centers on tariff negotiations with U.S. President Donald Trump
- Premiers are seeking more detail on how Carney plans to negotiate with the U.S.

The Real Question

- What would actually hurt more — Trump's tariffs, or a Canadian PM who doesn't have a clear plan to fight them?

■■ Trump vows US strike on Houthis after Red Sea attacks

The Angle: The Houthi militia keeps hitting ships in one of the world's busiest shipping lanes, and now the incoming Trump administration is putting Iran on notice—this could escalate fast and hit your wallet at the checkout.

- President Trump vowed Thursday to hold Iran accountable for any attacks by Yemen's Houthis on commercial shipping
- Houthis fired at two Saudi ships in the Red Sea, continuing months of attacks on vessels in a critical global trade route
- The Red Sea corridor is essential for international commerce—disruptions ripple through supply chains and consumer prices worldwide

The Stakes Question

- If this escalates into a full US strike on the Houthis, does that pull America deeper into another Middle East conflict—and who pays the price at home?

■■ Trump gets power to seize California land for oil—Democrats freaking out

The Angle: The House just passed a $1.15 trillion defense bill that gives the Trump administration authority to take over California state property to ramp up oil production. It's the kind of federal-vs.-state power play that's already got Democratic leadership sounding alarms—and it's the kind of move that shows how much Trump's agenda has shifted in round two.

- House passed a $1.15 trillion defense bill that includes language allowing the Trump administration to seize state lands
- The provision targets California property specifically to expand oil production capacity
- Democrats are already signaling legal challenges and calling the move an overreach of executive power

The Federalism Flash

- Is this a legitimate national energy strategy or a power grab dressed up in a defense bill—and would your state's governor fight back the same way California is threatening to?

■■ Trump ties Saudi nuke deal to Israel peace pact

The Angle: Trump just weaponized what could be a massive Middle East power play—using a nuclear agreement as leverage to force Saudi Arabia into normalizing ties with Israel. It's a high-stakes gamble that could reshape the entire region, or blow up in his face.

- Trump announced a newly agreed nuclear deal with Saudi Arabia is now conditional on the kingdom joining the Abraham Accords
- The condition requires Riyadh to normalize diplomatic relations with Israel
- Trump said the nuclear agreement is 'totally subject' to this Israel normalization requirement

The Leverage Play

- Is tying a nuclear deal to Middle East peace a brilliant power move or a reckless way to sink both negotiations?

ON-AIR BIT BREAKDOWN

- Step 1: The Setup - 30 seconds -> One host explains what Trump just announced: nuke deal locked in, but Saudi Arabia has to normalize with Israel first. The other host asks: does that actually work as a bargaining chip?
- Step 2: The Stakes - 60 seconds -> Hosts debate—is this genius leverage (what does Saudi Arabia want more: nukes or independence from Israel politics?) or is it overreach that could tank everything and embarrass the U.S. on the world stage?
- Step 3: The Wildcard - 45 seconds -> Phone line or quick audience poll: Do you think Saudi Arabia will fold and normalize with Israel to get the nuclear deal, or will they walk away? What would you choose?

■ Pentagon was hunting for gain-of-function research way before COVID

■ Breakout potential (editorial judgment, below the usual engagement bar): COVID-origin questions remain a live third-rail with sustained audience appetite, and a top virologist testifying to Congress about Pentagon gain-of-function proposals is a specific, credible news hook that hasn't saturated.
The Angle: A top virologist just told Congress that the Pentagon was actively soliciting proposals for "gain of function" research—making pathogens more transmissible—years before the pandemic hit. This is reigniting the lab-origin debate and raising hard questions about what U.S. officials knew and funded.

- A top virologist testified to Congress that the Pentagon requested 'gain of function' research proposals ahead of the COVID-19 pandemic
- Gain of function research involves making pathogens more transmissible or dangerous in laboratory settings
- The testimony is fueling renewed scrutiny into the origins of COVID-19 and U.S. pandemic preparedness funding

The Accountability Question

- If the Pentagon was funding this kind of research before COVID, shouldn't Americans know exactly what was approved, who approved it, and why?

■ Canadian premiers demand Carney's Trump tariff battle plan

■ Breakout potential (editorial judgment, below the usual engagement bar): Trump tariff fears are the dominant economic story right now and Canadian premiers demanding urgent action signals real political pressure—early indicator of a story about to spike as tariff details emerge.
The Angle: Canada's provincial leaders are pressuring Prime Minister Carney to come out swinging with a concrete strategy against potential Trump tariffs—this is shaping up as a major political and economic flashpoint that could reshape North American trade.

- Canadian premiers are calling for immediate action from PM Carney on U.S. tariff threats
- Provinces are signaling 'a new level of urgency' around the tariff issue
- The pressure reflects growing concern about economic impact across multiple provinces and industries

The Political Pressure Play

- Is Carney moving fast enough to protect Canadian jobs, or is this just posturing before the real negotiation starts?

■ Jason Alexander apologizes to Courtney Stodden over controversial sketch

■ Breakout potential (editorial judgment, below the usual engagement bar): Courtney Stodden's recurrent role as a voice against exploitation of young women, combined with a prominent 'Seinfeld' figure's apology, hits both nostalgia and accountability narratives that resonate strongly with wider audiences.

The Angle: A 'Seinfeld' star publicly apologized this week for filming an inappropriate sketch with Courtney Stodden when she was 17—and her response is sparking a bigger conversation about accountability in Hollywood. It's a rare moment of an established actor owning a mistake.

- Jason Alexander, known for his role on 'Seinfeld,' apologized for filming an inappropriate sketch with Courtney Stodden when she was a 17-year-old minor
- Stodden responded by saying she was 'very taken aback that an adult was actually able to take accountability' because she hasn't seen much of that from other adults in the industry

The Rarity Check

- Is public accountability from famous people actually becoming more common, or is Alexander's apology genuinely so rare it caught Stodden off guard?
