TODAY'S RUNDOWN SLOTS

THE LIST (2 stories)

■ Ottawa warns Trump bill could doom right whales

The Angle: Canada's fisheries department is sounding an internal alarm about U.S. legislation that could tank conservation efforts for one of the world's most endangered marine mammals. It's a cross-border environmental clash with real teeth.

- Canadian Fisheries Department staff issued an internal memo warning a U.S. bill backed by Trump threatens North Atlantic right whale survival
- Right whales are among the world's most endangered species, with only a few hundred remaining
- The warning signals a potential breakdown in joint U.S.-Canada whale protection efforts

The Cross-Border Showdown

- Should Canada take its own action if the U.S. won't protect whales we both depend on—or is this a wait-and-see moment?

■ Climate change doubled wildfire odds in Canada—study warns

The Angle: A new rapid analysis links human-caused climate change directly to the devastating wildfires ravaging Canada's Northwest Territories and Ontario—finding they're now roughly twice as likely to happen. It's a concrete, data-driven connection between global warming and the disasters unfolding right now in people's backyards.

- A rapid analysis found human-induced climate change made wildfires in the Northwest Territories and Ontario about twice as likely to occur
- The analysis warns the world must step away from fossil fuels to prevent worsening wildfire risk
- The study connects current Canadian wildfire disasters directly to climate change, not just speculation or modeling

The Reality Check

- If climate change just doubled your wildfire risk, what does that mean for where you're willing to live or raise a family—and do you actually believe the fossil fuel industry has to change, or is that just wishful thinking?

TRENDING TODAY

■■ Canada quietly exits its peacekeeping identity

The Angle: Canada is pulling troops from four overseas peacekeeping missions and cutting back a fifth—effectively ending a decades-long tradition that once defined the country on the world stage. The move has critics warning Ottawa is ceding soft power and diplomatic clout to rivals like China.

- Defence Department shutting down four overseas missions and shrinking another, citing need for troops elsewhere
- Peacekeeping has been in gradual decline for decades but is now entering what observers call its final chapter
- Critics argue the pullback sacrifices a defining national identity and surrenders diplomatic influence to countries such as China

The Identity Shift

- Is Canada trading away soft power and a core part of who we are as a country—and will that bite us later?

LIFESTYLE CHAT

■■ Canadian workers push back on boss surveillance software

The Angle: Workplace monitoring software is becoming standard at major Canadian companies, but employees say constant screen-time tracking is tanking their mental health and trust. It's a real friction point as remote and hybrid work make surveillance easier—and more invasive.

- Workers at some of Canada's biggest companies report increased use of screen activity monitoring software
- Employees cite mental health toll from constant surveillance at work
- The trend is accelerating as remote and hybrid work becomes more common

The Workplace Reality Check

- Have you experienced workplace monitoring software—and did it actually change how you work, or just stress you out?

ON-AIR BIT BREAKDOWN

- Step 1: Quick Temperature Check - Opening the topic (1-2 min) -> Hosts share whether they'd accept a job with known screen-time monitoring—set a lighthearted tone before the real tension emerges
- Step 2: The Trust Divide - Mid-segment (2-3 min) -> Host A plays the employee angle (invasion of privacy, mental health hit), Host B plays the employer angle (productivity, accountability)—name the actual tension without resolving it
- Step 3: Open Phones - Final segment (5+ min) -> Take calls from listeners who work under monitoring software—ask what metric changed (productivity, morale, job hunting), and whether they'd quit over it

Backup options:

■ Quebec couple faces $20K birth bill over permit delays

The Angle: A work permit glitch has left a Quebec family in bureaucratic purgatory right before childbirth—raising questions about how quickly Canada's immigration system processes coverage gaps, and what happens when paperwork delays collide with hospital bills.

- A Quebec couple is facing a potential $20,000 childbirth tab after work permit delays left them without provincial health coverage
- The family has been stuck in bureaucratic limbo for months waiting for permit renewal decisions
- The issue affects their ability to maintain both work permits and provincial health coverage ahead of their second child's birth

The System Trap

- Have you or someone you know hit a coverage gap in the health or immigration system right when you needed it most? What actually happened?

■ WHO chief in Congo as Ebola outbreak hits historic speed

The Angle: The world's fastest-growing Ebola outbreak is tearing through Congo right now—nearly 3,900 cases and climbing—but here's the catch: some of the health workers actually fighting it are walking out over unpaid wages. It's a crisis hitting a crisis.

- WHO chief arrived in Congo as the outbreak spreads at alarming rate
- 3,874 confirmed cases and 1,751 deaths as of Monday
- Aid workers say this is the fastest-growing Ebola outbreak in history
- Some health workers are striking over unpaid wages while trying to contain the spread

The Reality Check

- How do you fight a historic disease outbreak when the people on the front lines aren't even getting paid?

CLOSER: THROWBACK THURSDAY

■ Nike revives the sneaker MJ wore for his final championship run

The Angle: The Air Jordan 13 is back—and it's the same shoe Michael Jordan laced up during the Bulls' sixth title in 1998. For sneaker heads and nostalgia-driven fans, this is the shoe that ended the most iconic career in basketball history.

- Michael Jordan wore the Air Jordan 13 during his sixth and final NBA championship with the Chicago Bulls
- The shoe was part of Jordan's last season—his second retirement from pro basketball
- Nike is releasing the retro version with the iconic 'Wings' colorway

The Sneaker Flex

- Are you dropping the cash on a piece of MJ history, or is retro-nostalgia pricing getting out of hand?

ON-AIR BIT BREAKDOWN

- Step 1: The MJ Timeline - Quick context -> Host A lays out: Jordan wore these in '98, won #6, then walked away—remind the room why that matters to sneaker culture today.
- Step 2: The Price Reality Check - Current fact -> Host B asks—do we know the retail yet? If not, riff on what retro AJ's typically cost and whether nostalgia is worth it.
- Step 3: The Collector's Gamble - Phone-in topic -> Open lines: Are you a sneaker investor (flip for profit), a wearer (rock them), or a spectator (just watch the hype)? Which makes the most sense?

■ OpenAI and Anthropic race to dominate the AI arms race

The Angle: Two of the biggest players in generative AI are locked in a high-stakes competition for market dominance, investor cash, and technical superiority. This rivalry is reshaping how fast AI innovation moves and what it means for everyday users.

- OpenAI and Anthropic are the leading contenders in the commercial AI space, both backed by massive venture funding and tech heavyweight attention
- The competition centers on AI model capabilities, safety claims, and the race to build the next generation of large language models
- Both companies are competing for enterprise customers, developer adoption, and regulatory influence as governments worldwide scramble to set AI policy

The Watercooler Question

- Which AI company do you think will actually win this race—and does it matter to you which one gets there first?

ON-AIR BIT BREAKDOWN

- Step 1: The Quick Primer - 30 seconds -> Co-host gives a 30-second explainer on why OpenAI and Anthropic matter: who backs them, what they're fighting over, and why you should care beyond Silicon Valley drama
- Step 2: The Viewer Test - 2-3 minutes -> Hosts ask listeners: Have you used ChatGPT, Claude, or both? Which one do you actually prefer and why? Phone lines open or social feedback
- Step 3: The Stakes Check - 2 minutes -> Talk through the real-world implications: faster innovation vs. safety concerns, winner-take-all market dynamics, and whether this competition is actually good for consumers or just billionaire ego-pushing

■ Canadian hacker admits to Snowflake breach, extortion scheme

The Angle: A major cybersecurity case just wrapped with a guilty plea—this is the kind of large-scale data theft and extortion that affects millions of regular people's personal information. It's a real-world reminder of how vulnerable our cloud data storage actually is.

- Canadian man pleaded guilty to four charges: computer fraud, wire fraud, aggravated identity theft, and conspiracy
- The breach targeted Snowflake Inc., a major cloud data storage company trusted by Fortune 500 companies
- The scheme involved stealing data and extorting victims for millions of dollars

■■ Trump says he loves Canadians—but calls them 'nasty'

The Angle: The U.S. President is sending mixed signals north of the border, praising Canadian people while taking a sharp shot at Canadian leadership. It's the kind of Trump contradiction that's already sparking debate on both sides of the border.

- Trump told a Vegas audience: 'They are nasty. I love the people, but they're nasty.'
- He followed the critique by saying 'Nasty leadership' is the actual problem
- The remarks come as trade tensions and diplomatic friction between the U.S. and Canada remain high

The Backhanded Compliment

- Is 'I love you but you're nasty' actually a compliment, or is Trump trying to have it both ways with Canada?
