THE LIST (2 stories)

■ Gordie Howe Bridge finally opens—what took so long?

The Angle: After years of delays and billions in investment, Canada and Michigan are officially opening the Gordie Howe International Bridge on July 27. This is a major infrastructure win for cross-border trade and commuters between Windsor and Detroit—but it's also a symbol of how long mega-projects actually take to finish.

- Canada and Michigan agreed to open the Gordie Howe International Bridge on July 27
- The bridge connects Windsor, Ontario and Detroit, Michigan
- It's designed to ease cross-border trade and traffic congestion on existing routes

The Commute Question

- For anyone who's sat in traffic crossing the Canada-US border—are you actually going to use this thing, or is it too late to break your commute habits?

TRENDING TODAY

■ George Lucas' billion-dollar museum opens its doors free to neighbors

The Angle: A major new cultural institution in L.A. is making a deliberate play to serve the low-income community around it—offering free annual passes and early access to residents before the public even arrives. It's a rare move that's sparking conversation about who museums are really built for.

- Lucas Museum of Narrative Art opens to the public Sept. 22 in a low-income Los Angeles neighborhood
- The institution is a billion-dollar cultural space built by George Lucas
- A quarter of the population in the surrounding neighborhood lives below the poverty line
- The museum is offering free annual passes and early preview access to closest residential neighbors before the public launch

The Big Gesture Question

- Is this genuine community investment, or a billionaire's PR play—and does the motive actually matter if neighbors get free access to a world-class museum?

■ Hollywood's LGBTQ character count drops for third straight year

The Angle: A new GLAAD report shows LGBTQ representation in major studio films is shrinking, not growing — and it's sparking questions about whether the industry's diversity promises were ever real.

- GLAAD found zero LGBTQ characters in 19 animated/family films from the 10 biggest studio distributors
- No transgender characters appeared in the entire crop of 225 films studied
- LGBTQ character count has dropped for three consecutive years according to the latest report

The Industry Call-Out

- Are studios deliberately backtracking on representation, or is Hollywood's diversity talk just empty PR—and does it actually matter to viewers?

ON-AIR BIT BREAKDOWN

- Step 1: The Setup - 30 seconds -> Co-host reads the stark numbers aloud—zero LGBTQ, zero trans characters in 225 films—and lets that land with the audience
- Step 2: The Question - 1 minute -> Ask listeners: Is this a coincidence or a choice? Have you noticed fewer LGBTQ characters at the movies lately, or are the studios just hiding them?
- Step 3: The Deeper Take - 2 minutes -> Debate whether Hollywood made loud diversity promises that were never backed by real change—or if there's a business/market reason studios are pulling back now

■ Cuba's power grid collapses again—second blackout in a week

The Angle: Cuba is facing its fourth nationwide blackout of the year as an aging electrical system and a U.S. oil embargo create a perfect storm. This isn't just a local power issue—it's a humanitarian crisis playing out in real time on an island of 11 million people.

- Second massive blackout in one week—Cuba's entire electrical grid collapsed on Friday, following another nationwide outage just days earlier
- Fourth grid failure this year, signaling a systemic collapse rather than isolated incidents
- The crisis is driven by a combination of U.S.-imposed oil blockade and obsolete generation infrastructure that can't handle demand
- The island nation is struggling to keep basic services running—hospitals, water systems, and transportation all depend on power the grid can no longer reliably provide

The Reality Check

- How long can a country actually function without reliable electricity—and what does this tell us about how fragile modern infrastructure really is?

■ Pipeline plans spark Indigenous leadership fury across Canada

The Angle: First Nations chiefs say the government blindsided them on major energy infrastructure projects that directly affect their lands—raising fresh questions about whether Ottawa's consultation promises are real or just theater.

- Two pipelines announced in Alberta, B.C., and Ontario with First Nations chiefs learning about plans through last-minute emails and rumours rather than formal government outreach
- Indigenous leaders say they were not meaningfully engaged before public announcements were made
- The controversy centres on whether government consultation obligations to First Nations are being met on major infrastructure projects

The Trust Buster

■ Meta's billion-dollar Alberta data centre faces power crunch

The Angle: Meta is betting $13 billion on a massive data centre near Edmonton that'll be ready in 2-3 years—but the natural gas power plant built specifically to feed it won't be online for at least four years. It's a classic tech infrastructure race against the clock, and someone's going to be scrambling.

- Meta's data centre costs $13 billion-plus and is expected to operate within two to three years
- A new natural gas-fired power plant north of Edmonton won't be ready for at least four years
- The power plant is being built specifically to serve the data centre's massive energy needs
- The timing mismatch means Meta will need interim power solutions or face delays to its AI/cloud infrastructure rollout in Canada

The Planning Disaster

- When a $13-billion tech project launches before its power supply is ready, who takes the hit—and what's the backup plan?

■ Last American on iron lung for polio dies at 78

■ Breakout potential (editorial judgment, below the usual engagement bar): Last living American polio iron lung patient death is a historically significant public health story with natural obituary momentum and vaccine debate resonance.

The Angle: Martha Lillard was the final living symbol of polio's grip on America—she spent over seven decades in an iron lung after contracting the virus as a child. Her death marks the end of an era and a stark reminder of why vaccination matters, especially as polio resurfaces globally.

- Martha Lillard was the last known U.S. patient still using an iron lung for polio
- She died at age 78 in Oklahoma
- Lillard had been dependent on the iron lung for more than 70 years after contracting polio as a child
- Polio, once a scourge that paralyzed thousands of Americans annually, has resurged in parts of the world where vaccination rates have dropped

The History Check

- How many of you even knew what an iron lung was before today—or that polio was still a threat anywhere on Earth?

■ Anthony Hopkins Just Became a Classical Composer—Seriously

■ Breakout potential (editorial judgment, below the usual engagement bar): Oscar winner Anthony Hopkins pivoting to classical composition is a genuine celebrity reinvention story with built-in prestige angle and crossover appeal.

The Angle: The Oscar winner and Hollywood legend is pivoting to classical music with a major record deal. It's the kind of unexpected celebrity move that has people asking: is he actually talented at this, or is this just famous-person vanity?

- Anthony Hopkins, Oscar-winning actor, signed with Decca Classics as a classical composer
- Hopkins has composed music for years but this is his first major record label deal in the classical space
- The partnership positions Hopkins alongside serious classical artists on one of the world's most prestigious classical music labels

The Plot Twist

- Do you buy it—is this a genuine artistic pivot or just another celebrity side hustle playing with expensive toys?

ON-AIR BIT BREAKDOWN

- Step 1: The Credential Check - Opening segment -> Host A plays a clip of Hopkins talking about his compositional background; Host B does a quick riff on whether this is 'real' or vanity—tie it to other actors who play musicians or vice versa
- Step 2: The Phone Question - Mid-segment -> Ask callers: Have you ever discovered a hidden talent in someone famous that totally surprised you? Or is celebrity classical music always a hard pass?
- Step 3: The Take - Tag-out -> Compare to other actors-turned-musicians (Jeff Bridges, Cher, etc.)—does the prestige of Decca Classics make this feel different, or does it still feel like a playground for the rich and famous?

■ Meta pulls the plug on new AI image tool after swift backlash

■ Breakout potential (editorial judgment, below the usual engagement bar): Meta suspending AI image feature after days of backlash shows momentum on AI safety concerns and corporate retreat - early signs of a growing story.

The Angle: Meta launched an AI image-generation feature and killed it within days—a rare corporate U-turn that signals how fast the public can force tech giants to retreat when something rubs people the wrong way. It's a window into the ongoing tension between AI innovation and real-world pushback.

- Meta suspended its AI image feature after days of backlash from users and critics
- The tool generated images from user prompts using the company's AI models
- The quick reversal highlights growing public pressure on tech companies over AI safety and misuse concerns

The Speed Test

- How many days should it take a tech giant to kill a feature—and does a quick pullback mean they were actually listening, or just damage-controlling?

ON-AIR BIT BREAKDOWN

- Step 1: The Timeline - First 60 seconds -> Host A: 'Walk me through this—when did Meta launch it?' Host B: 'Days ago.' Host A: 'And now it's gone.' Quick recap of the speed.
- Step 2: The Backlash Breakdown - Next 90 seconds -> Hosts dig into what specifically people were mad about—deepfakes? Misinformation? Copyright? Get specific on the complaint.
- Step 3: The Corporate Pattern - Final 60 seconds -> Host: 'Is this a win for public accountability, or is Meta just getting better at damage control?' Flip sides—which narrative sticks?
