THE LIST (5 stories)

■ Taylor Swift and Travis Kelce’s surprising plans for where they’ll live revealed after getting married

The Angle: The internet's favorite newlyweds are apparently keeping two homes instead of picking one - a real "wait, how does that even work" moment for the most-watched couple in the country.

- Taylor Swift and Travis Kelce tied the knot at Madison Square Garden on July 3
- The two are reportedly still figuring out where they'll actually settle down as a married couple
- Report says they're currently splitting time rather than merging into one home base

The Debate Starter

- Would you ever do a split-home marriage if you could afford it, or is that just asking for trouble?

■ Coinbase's Brian Armstrong says philanthropy is 'net negative' on world

The Angle: The billionaire CEO of one of the biggest crypto companies on the planet just torched the idea of charity itself, and the internet is not having it - that's a debate two hosts can run with instantly.

- Brian Armstrong, CEO of Coinbase, claims philanthropy is 'net negative' on the world.
- The comment is blowing up on Reddit's r/nottheonion, a sub literally reserved for headlines too absurd to be satire.
- Armstrong leads one of the largest cryptocurrency exchanges in the world, so this isn't some random hot take - it's coming from a guy worth billions.

The Debate Starter

- Is a tech billionaire trashing charity a bold contrarian take or just a convenient excuse not to give?

■ Flock worker calls police on InvestigateTV reporter filming public camera installation

The Angle: A journalist covering Flock Safety's controversial camera rollout got reported to police for filming a public installation - which is basically proving the story's point about surveillance overreach in real time.

- An InvestigateTV reporter was filming the installation of a Flock Safety camera in a public space.
- A Flock worker on site called the police on the reporter for filming.
- The installation was happening in public view - not on private property.

The Irony Alarm

- A surveillance company calling the cops on someone for... watching them install surveillance cameras - can it get more on-the-nose than that?

■ Supreme Court forces TV stations to sell more election ads at steep discounts | Republican victory means stations must offer lowest ad prices to political parties.

The Angle: This hits every swing-state mailbox and TV break for the next election cycle - the Supreme Court just ruled TV stations have to sell campaigns airtime at their rock-bottom rate, which changes how every political ad gets funded and aired nationwide.

- The Supreme Court sided with Republicans in the case.
- TV stations must now offer political parties their lowest existing ad rate, not a special (higher) political rate.
- The ruling forces stations to sell more election ad inventory at that discounted price.

The Debate Starter

- Cheaper political ads means more of them - are you ready for your local news breaks to be wall-to-wall campaign spots?

■ An Anthropic researcher just quit, saying OpenAI and Anthropic are 'gambling with our lives'

The Angle: When someone walks away from a company like Anthropic and says the quiet part out loud, that's a story - this taps into the real anxiety people have about AI moving faster than anyone can control it.

- A researcher who worked at Anthropic has resigned from the company.
- In their resignation, they said OpenAI and Anthropic are "gambling with our lives."
- The claim is circulating and generating buzz on Reddit's r/technology.

■ Trump bans Canadian products from U.S. government contracts

The Angle: This is a real escalation in the U.S.-Canada trade fight — locking an entire country's products out of federal contracts isn't a symbolic jab, it's policy with teeth, and it's the kind of cross-border story that hits different for a North American audience listening on both sides of the line.

- President Trump is banning Canadian-made products from U.S. federal government contracts
- The move ratchets up the ongoing U.S.-Canada trade dispute
- Canadian companies that rely on U.S. government business are the ones caught in the middle

The Debate Starter

■ Trump signs executive order to ban certain Canadian goods, including alcohol

The Angle: A new executive order targeting Canadian goods, alcohol included, is a real shot across the bow in US-Canada trade relations — and with a North American audience, this hits wallets and grocery/liquor store shelves on both sides of the border.

- President Trump signed an executive order banning certain Canadian goods from entering the U.S.
- Alcohol is specifically named among the targeted imports

- Details on the full scope of the ban and which other goods are affected are still emerging

The Debate Starter

■■ 'South Park' Changes Name to 'South America' as Creators Roast Apple and Google for Obeying Trump's Lake America Name Change

The Angle: South Park's creators are dragging two of the biggest tech companies on earth for bending the knee on a Trump-driven map name change - and they did it by renaming the show itself. It's satire, politics, and Big Tech all in one gag, which is exactly the mix that gets people talking.

- South Park rebranded itself to "South America" as part of the stunt.
- Creators Trey Parker and Matt Stone are calling out Apple and Google directly.
- The joke targets both companies for going along with Trump's "Lake America" name change.

The Debate Starter

■■ Canada in talks to sell nuclear-power technology, LNG to Poland

The Angle: Canada's reportedly in talks to sell nuclear-power technology and LNG to Poland - a sign Canada wants in on Europe's energy shakeup as countries look to ditch Russian energy and go nuclear again.

- Talks reportedly involve nuclear-power technology and LNG exports
- The buyer is Poland, which has been pushing hard to build out nuclear energy
- Fits Canada's bigger push to become a major energy exporter beyond just the US

The Debate Starter

■ 'Hunted,' 'shattered,' 'scared': How victims say Canada's most prolific voyeur has altered their lives

The Angle: CBC just dropped a months-long investigation into the largest voyeurism case ever reported in Canada, and the victim accounts are gutting - this is the kind of story that makes people rethink their own sense of privacy and safety.

- CBC News spent months combing through court records and talking directly to victims for this investigation.
- It's being described as the largest voyeurism case ever reported in Canada.
- Victims use words like 'hunted,' 'shattered,' and 'scared' to describe the aftermath.
- Survivors say the case has made it hard to simply get back to normal life.

🛩■ GlobalEye gamble: Ottawa chose surveillance plane without knowing it met military needs

The Angle: This is the kind of government-spending story that writes its own outrage — Canada's committing billions to surveillance aircraft before confirming they meet military needs, and critics say jobs and politics got the front seat over defence.

- Ottawa moved to acquire six GlobalEye surveillance aircraft without assurances they met military requirements.
- Those requirements were reportedly never shared with competing manufacturers, raising fairness questions about the whole process.
- Later assessments found capability gaps in the aircraft, meaning modifications are now needed.
- Critics say the Carney government's push for speed, jobs and industrial benefits may have outranked the military's actual operational needs.

■ The biggest dinosaurs couldn't sit on their eggs. Scientists say they did this instead

The Angle: Scientists just figured out how the biggest dinosaurs on Earth managed to hatch babies without ever sitting on a nest - and the eggs turned up somewhere way colder than anyone expected.

- The eggshells belong to titanosaurs - some of the largest dinosaurs to ever exist.
- They were found in a surprisingly cool climate, far from the equator, not the warm tropics you'd expect.
- These dinosaurs were simply too big to physically sit on their eggs like a bird would.
- Microscopic evidence in the shells reveals another method they used to keep the eggs warm enough to hatch.

We especially thank our parent company Paramount - a Skydance Capitulation"*

The Angle: Trey Parker and Matt Stone just torched their own network on the way out the door, dragging Apple, Google, and Paramount's Skydance deal into one savage joke about corporate cowardice — classic South Park chaos that doubles as media-industry shade.

- Trey Parker & Matt Stone announced the show is being renamed "SOUTH AMERICA"
- They say it's "inspired by the bravery & patriotism of Apple & Google" — dripping sarcasm at two tech giants

- They specifically thank parent company Paramount, calling it "a Skydance Capitulation" — a jab at the Paramount-Skydance merger

- A woman bought the island specifically to stop clear-cutting on it
- Audubon opened its very first camp there — and that was 90 years ago
- The island is still an active training ground for conservationists today

The Takeaway

- One person, one purchase, 90 years of ripple effects — that's the kind of legacy most people never get to leave.

■ Older Adults Bond With AI Chatbots That Feel Genuine, Not Ones That Sound Human

The Angle: AI companion apps are exploding among older adults dealing with loneliness, and this study flips the assumption that a realistic voice is the key selling point — turns out it's warmth, not realism, that wins them over.

- A new study finds older adults bond with AI chatbots based on perceived sincerity, not how human the voice sounds.
- Whether the AI's voice was robotic or lifelike mattered far less than whether it came across as genuinely caring.

The Debate Starter

- If your parent or grandparent found real comfort talking to a chatbot every day, would that ease your mind or worry you?

BREAKOUT WATCH (below the show's usual engagement bar - included on editorial judgment, not metrics; producer's call)

■ Rwanda named 22 baby mountain gorillas at its annual conservation ceremony as the population in the Virunga Massif has risen from about 250 in the early 1980s to more than 600 today. More than 1,000 mountain gorillas now live in the wild worldwide.

■ Breakout potential (editorial judgment, below the usual engagement bar): Rwanda's Kwita Izina gorilla-naming ceremony regularly draws international celebrities and media, and the population rebound from 250 to 600+ gorillas is a strong, visual conservation-success narrative that travels well outside Reddit.
The Angle: It's the ultimate feel-good conservation story — a species once on the brink now has more than 1,000 members in the wild, and Rwanda celebrates it every year like a royal baby announcement.

- Rwanda held its annual ceremony naming 22 baby mountain gorillas

- The Virunga Massif population has grown from about 250 gorillas in the early 1980s to more than 600 today
- There are now more than 1,000 mountain gorillas living in the wild worldwide

The Feel-Good Finish

- Name one of these baby gorillas live on air — what's the most ridiculous name you'd give it?

■ The Pentagon Asked OpenAI for Artificial Intelligence Designed to Rarely Say No

■ Breakout potential (editorial judgment, below the usual engagement bar): The Pentagon-OpenAI story taps directly into the hottest current AI-safety anxiety (a military AI 'designed to rarely say no'), a framing likely to get picked up and amplified across tech and policy media.
The Angle: The idea of a military AI engineered to be more compliant than cautious is exactly the kind of sci-fi-meets-real-life headline that gets people talking about where the guardrails should be.

- Report says the Pentagon approached OpenAI about building AI systems designed to rarely refuse requests
- Raises the core tension between military efficiency and built-in AI safety refusals
- Comes amid growing scrutiny of how AI companies balance government contracts with safety commitments

The Debate Starter

- Should AI built for the military be allowed to say 'no' at all, or is that the whole point of having a human in the loop?

■ Wrongly jailed Florida woman a victim of police abuse of Flock: Attorney

■ Breakout potential (editorial judgment, below the usual engagement bar): A wrongful jailing tied to Flock Safety's license-plate cameras combines a sympathetic victim with the surveillance-tech backlash that's already trending, giving it a strong emotional-plus-timely hook.
The Angle: A Florida woman says she was wrongly locked up because police misused a Flock Safety license-plate camera network — the same tech now watching drivers in cities all over North America, which makes this a privacy story way bigger than one city.

- A Florida woman was jailed despite being innocent, according to her own attorney.
- Her lawyer is blaming the wrongful arrest directly on police misuse of Flock Safety camera data.
- Flock's automated license-plate readers are used by police departments across the U.S. to track vehicle movements in real time.

The Debate Starter

- Are you okay with cops scanning every plate on the road if it means innocent people occasionally end up in handcuffs?

■ Scientists found 66-million-year-old blood vessels in the broken rib of the largest known T. rex and they show the dinosaur had already started healing the injury

■ Breakout potential (editorial judgment, below the usual engagement bar): A healing T. rex injury preserved in 66-million-year-old blood vessels is exactly the kind of vivid, easily-explained dinosaur science story that has gone viral repeatedly in the past.
The Angle: Scientists found 66-million-year-old blood vessels in the broken rib of the largest known T. rex and they show the dinosaur had already started healing the injury
