TODAY'S RUNDOWN SLOTS

THE LIST (5 stories)

■■ Chuck Grassley, oldest sitting US senator, laments dying in office under a Democratic governor

The Angle: Chuck Grassley is the oldest sitting U.S. Senator, and he's now on record saying he'd rather not die in office if it means a Democratic governor gets to pick his replacement - a wild, out-loud admission of exactly how the political sausage gets made.

- Chuck Grassley is currently the oldest sitting U.S. Senator
- He's reportedly said he'd prefer not to pass away in office under a Democratic governor
- The story landed on r/nottheonion - real news that reads like satire
- Reason it matters: in most states, the governor appoints a Senate replacement if a senator dies in office

The Debate Starter

- Should there be an age limit for serving in Congress - and does this comment prove why?

■ Police investigate after toddler pulls out loaded gun at Michigan daycare

The Angle: A daycare full of toddlers had a live, loaded gun in it — and the twist is the parent now in custody is a police officer, the person you'd expect to know better about gun storage. It's a gun-safety story with a built-in irony that'll get parents and gun owners both talking.

- A toddler pulled out a loaded pistol at a daycare in southeast Michigan on Monday.
- One of the child's parents — a police officer — has been taken into custody.
- Officials say the investigation is ongoing, no further details released yet.

The Gut-Check Question

- If a cop's kid can bring a loaded gun to daycare, how confident are you your own gun storage is actually toddler-proof?

■ ShinyHunters hackers say they won't leak sensitive FBI data

The Angle: A hacking crew just admitted to breaching the FBI itself and is now playing PR — promising not to publish the data while admitting they already handed some of it to reporters. It's a wild trust-us moment from a group that just proved you can't trust them.

- The group behind the breach is called ShinyHunters
- They say they will not publish the FBI data they obtained
- They admit they can't guarantee what happens to data already shared with journalists
- The target of the breach was the FBI itself

The Debate Starter

- Do you believe a hacking group's promise not to leak stolen federal data, or is 'trust us' the least trustworthy sentence in tech?

■ Canada led a 2022 deal to protect the world's nature. Has there been progress since then?

The Angle: Canada helped broker a major global pact back in 2022 to protect the planet's nature, and a fresh report card is now out checking whether countries actually kept their word — classic promises-vs-action fodder for a talk segment.

- Canada helped lead a landmark 2022 global agreement aimed at protecting nature worldwide.
- A new assessment has just been released measuring how much real progress has been made since that deal was signed.

The Report Card

- Four years after the big promise — is the planet actually better off, or was it just a photo-op?

■ 'Backrooms,' 'The Shining' and Beyond: The Creepiest Liminal Spaces in Movies

The Angle: The horror hit Backrooms turned an internet creepypasta into a box office smash, and it's reviving the whole 'liminal space' horror trope - those eerie, empty, fluorescent-lit places that feel wrong for no clear reason.

- Backrooms started as an internet creepypasta before becoming a smash horror hit in theaters.
- The film has critics tracing a whole lineage of 'liminal space' horror, from empty office hallways to abandoned malls.
- The Shining's Overlook Hotel gets cited as one of the genre's original creepy liminal spaces.

The Debate Starter

■ If You Use Money to Buy Things, You Should Read This Book

The Angle: Surveillance pricing means companies can charge YOU a different price than the person next to you based on your data - and a new book says the popular theory that this actually helps poor shoppers is total nonsense.

- Lindsay Owens just wrote a new book called "Gouged" breaking down how companies price-gouge using your own data
- She's debunking the "Robin Hood theory" - the idea that surveillance pricing takes from rich shoppers to give discounts to poor ones
- Her argument: that theory is a myth - it's not quietly helping anyone, it's just extracting more money

■ Hamilton steel plant to lay off 500 workers as U.S. tariffs prompt 'survival' move

The Angle: Half a thousand Hamilton families just got hit with layoff notices, and the company's blunt reason — U.S. tariffs — makes this a real gut-check on how trade fights south of the border are landing on Canadian paycheques.

- A Hamilton steel plant is cutting 500 jobs.
- The company is pointing straight at U.S. tariffs as the cause.
- Management is framing the move as a 'survival' measure, not just a cost-cutting choice.

The Debate Starter

- 500 jobs gone in Hamilton over U.S. tariffs — is this the first real sign Canadian workers are paying the price for the trade war?

■■ Grave of boy who vanished at residential school found decades later, First Nation looks for others like him

The Angle: This taps into one of the most painful, still-unresolved threads in Canadian history — a First Nation community finally locating the grave of a child who disappeared decades ago at a residential school, and now searching for others who met the same fate.

- A First Nation community has located the grave of a boy who went missing at a residential school decades ago.
- The discovery is part of a broader search effort to identify other children who disappeared under similar circumstances.

The Gravity Check

- Stories like this are a reminder that the reckoning with Canada's residential school system is still actively unfolding, not history that's been closed.

■■ LNG Canada to move forward with Phase 2 expansion project in Kitimat, B.C.

The Angle: LNG Canada is greenlighting Phase 2 of its massive Kitimat export terminal, basically doubling down on Canada's bet that liquefied natural gas is the next big energy export - huge for jobs and the economy out west, but it's also reigniting the climate-vs-economy fight.

- LNG Canada is moving ahead with Phase 2 of its export terminal in Kitimat, B.C.
- Phase 2 would roughly double the facility's existing export capacity
- The original project is one of the largest private infrastructure investments in Canadian history

The Angle: The VS Fashion Show is back and swinging for every demo at once — pop, hip-hop, country, all on one runway. That genre mashup alone is worth a segment: who's actually watching for who?

- KATSEYE is on the bill, riding their breakout year as a global pop girl group.
- Megan Thee Stallion joins the lineup, bringing hip-hop star power to the runway.
- Tate McRae adds pure pop-choreography energy to the show.
- Megan Moroney rounds it out, giving the lineup a country crossover moment.

■ The college dean scene in Promising Young Woman (2020): "We get accusations like that all the time, one or two a week... What would you have me do? Ruin a young man's life every time we get an accusation like this? I have to give them the benefit of the doubt."

The Angle: This five-year-old moment from the Oscar-winning film is making the rounds again on Reddit because the dean's excuse-making still sounds ripped from real headlines - it's a quick, quotable way to get into how institutions handle accusations.

- The scene: a college dean brushing off assault accusations, saying 'we get accusations like that all the time, one or two a week.'
- His justification: 'What would you have me do? Ruin a young man's life every time we get an accusation like this?'
- It's resurfacing on r/fauxmoi as one of Promising Young Woman's most-quoted, most uncomfortable moments.

■ The new research found that using social media, especially within 30 minutes of waking, was associated with more than twice the odds of depression among U.S. adults.

The Angle: Almost everyone reaches for their phone first thing in the morning — this is basically a universal habit, and new research links that exact 30-minute window to more than double the odds of depression, which makes it a story every listener can immediately measure themselves against.

- Study found scrolling social media within 30 minutes of waking was linked to more than double the odds of depression among U.S. adults.
- The research zeroes in on timing, not just total usage — it's specifically about that first half hour of the day.

The Self-Check Moment

ON-AIR BIT BREAKDOWN

- Step 1: Set the scene - 10 seconds -> Host reads the headline dead serious, then pauses for the reaction beat.
- Step 2: Rate the excuse - 30 seconds -> Hosts each give the 'gotta pee' excuse a score out of 10 for believability.
- Step 3: Phone-in / text-in - Open lines -> Ask listeners to text in their own worst 'I panicked and did something dumb' excuse.
- Step 4: Read a few live - 1-2 minutes -> Hosts pick 2-3 funniest listener excuses to read before tossing to goodbyes.

■ Where to Watch ‘The Swan: Behind the Mirror,’ New Doc Detailing TV’s Most Controversial Reality Show in History

The Angle: A new documentary is dragging one of reality TV's most jaw-dropping relics back into the light - a show that put women through three months of cosmetic surgery and called them 'ugly ducklings.' It's a perfect gut-check on how far we've come (or haven't) with beauty standards on TV.

- The original 'The Swan' aired in 2004, taking self-described 'ugly ducklings' through months of extreme cosmetic surgery makeovers.
- The new documentary, 'The Swan: Behind the Mirror,' is directed by Erin Lee Carr.
- It's revisiting the show 22 years later, reexamining just how extreme early-2000s reality TV really got.

The Debate Starter

- Was 'The Swan' just extreme even for its time, or could a show like this actually get made today?

ADDITIONAL CANDIDATES (no specific segment match, but scored well on source/quality - producer's call on where these fit)

■ Flock Safety CEO's Home Marked 'Public Toilet' After It Was Blurred on Street View

The Angle: The guy running a company that watches everyone else's license plates blurred out his own home on Street View — so the internet's revenge was tagging it a public restroom. It's the internet's favorite genre: petty, poetic justice.

- The CEO of Flock Safety, a company known for license-plate surveillance cameras, had his own home blurred out on Google Street View.
- In response, internet users reportedly got the address relabeled online as a "Public Toilet."
- The story is making rounds on r/nottheonion for the sheer irony of a surveillance exec dodging the same visibility his company profits from.

The Irony Meter

- A guy who built a business watching your car wants privacy for his own front door — fair trade, or comedy gold?

■ An 11-year-old from Harrow has become the youngest woman grandmaster in chess history

■ Breakout potential (editorial judgment, below the usual engagement bar): An 11-year-old becoming the youngest woman grandmaster ever is a clean, verifiable record-breaking human-interest story with instant emotional pull and no controversy to slow sharing.

■■■ Crows are being given naloxone after suspected drug overdoses in Prince George

■ Breakout potential (editorial judgment, below the usual engagement bar): Crows getting naloxone for opioid overdoses is a genuinely bizarre, never-seen-before angle on the opioid crisis that hits the 'wait, what?'

shareability sweet spot — and it's already independently posted twice, a sign of organic momentum.
The Angle: A wildly bizarre headline that fuses the real opioid crisis with straight-up absurdist local news - the kind of 'wait, what?' story that's tailor-made for the goodbye segment.

- Story out of Prince George, British Columbia - crows reportedly showing signs of suspected drug overdoses.
- Wildlife responders have been giving the birds naloxone, the same overdose-reversal drug (Narcan) used on humans.

The Jaw-Drop Moment

- Nature's weirdest sign of the opioid crisis yet, or the most 'only in 2026' headline you'll read all week?

■ A TV journalist is set to be crowned as king of a traditional monarchy in Uganda

■ Breakout potential (editorial judgment, below the usual engagement bar): A TV journalist becoming an actual king is a startlingly novel real-life narrative arc that reads like fiction, the kind of premise people share just to prove it's real.
The Angle: A working TV journalist is about to trade the anchor desk for an actual throne in a traditional Ugandan kingdom — it's the kind of real-life plot twist that sounds made up but isn't, and it's tailor-made for a quick "wait, what?" moment on air.

The Reality Check

- If you found out your co-anchor was secretly royalty, would you still let them get you coffee?

■ Book Award Winner Complains About White Paint Because of Its “Purity” and “Cleanliness”

■ Breakout potential (editorial judgment, below the usual engagement bar): A prestigious award winner objecting to white paint over its 'purity' framing is tailor-made outrage/mockery bait for r/nottheonion's core audience and could easily snowball once screenshotted onto other platforms.
The Angle: A celebrated author is calling out a paint brand for marketing white as "pure" and "clean" — a classic case of someone finding hidden meaning in the most boring color on the shelf, and it's tailor-up for a quick did-they-have-a-point debate.

- A book award winner is publicly objecting to a white paint product
- The complaint centers on the paint being marketed with words like "purity" and "cleanliness"
- Story's blowing up on r/nottheonion for how out-there it sounds at first glance

The Debate Starter

- Genuine critique of loaded language, or reaching way too hard over a paint can?

■ NYC man killed in freak accident after backpack got caught in subway doors https://t.co/uJeTRvOIXu https://t.co/wTUsKgRJCt

■ Breakout potential (editorial judgment, below the usual engagement bar): A freak fatal accident involving a backpack and subway doors is a uniquely visceral, almost-unbelievable death that tends to spike shares purely on shock value.
The Angle: A bizarre, almost unbelievable freak accident in the NYC subway that instantly becomes a nightmare-scenario story every straphanger can picture themselves in.

- A man in New York City was killed after his backpack got caught in subway doors, according to the New York Post.
- Officials are calling it a freak accident — details on exactly how it unfolded are still limited.

The Nightmare Scenario

- Be honest — how many of you have had a bag or coat sleeve catch in closing subway or train doors and had that split-second panic?

■ 'Betrayed' Prince William tangled in another royal feud after family member opens up 'traumatic' chapter https://t.co/KXbVRdiu15 https://t.c

■ Breakout potential (editorial judgment, below the usual engagement bar): Royal feud stories carry built-in global name recognition (Prince William) and 'traumatic' family drama is exactly the kind of tabloid hook that reliably outperforms its initial engagement.
The Angle: Another royal family member is going public with a 'traumatic' chapter and calling out Prince William directly — royal drama is always a ratings magnet, and 'betrayed' is a strong word for a royal to use on the record.

- A royal family member is opening up about a chapter they call 'traumatic'
- Prince William is described as feeling 'betrayed' by the fallout
- Marks the latest in an ongoing string of royal family feuds

The Debate Starter

- Is the royal family ever going to catch a break, or is the drama just part of the brand at this point?
