TODAY'S RUNDOWN SLOTS

THE LIST (3 stories)

■ Professor suspects mass AI cheating at Brown University

The Angle: A Brown University professor just called out what looks like widespread student cheating using ChatGPT and similar tools—and Canadian educators say this is happening everywhere. It's raising real questions about how schools police academic honesty in the AI age.

- A Brown University professor went public about suspected large-scale AI cheating in his course
- Canadian educators and academic integrity experts confirm this is becoming a widespread pattern, not isolated incidents
- The issue spans across both U.S. and Canadian institutions and requires action from students, professors, and schools

The Confession Moment

- Did you or someone you know use ChatGPT to write a paper or assignment—and should students actually be honest about it now that it's everywhere?

ON-AIR BIT BREAKDOWN

- Step 1: The Poll - Quick listener snapshot -> Ask audience: Have you used AI on schoolwork or seen it happen? Text/call in—be honest, we're not snitching.
- Step 2: The Debate - Host-to-host friction -> One host argues it's cheating, full stop; the other pushes back—isn't AI just a research tool like Google? Where's the actual line?
- Step 3: The Expert Take - If available for callback -> Bring in an academic integrity officer or prof to explain how schools are actually catching it and what penalties look like.

■ Alberta's bold bet: Can Danielle Smith double down on oil?

The Angle: Alberta's premier is doubling down on fossil fuels at a time when Canada's feds are pushing climate commitments—setting up a major provincial-federal clash over energy policy and economic strategy that could reshape Western Canadian politics.

- Danielle Smith, Alberta's premier, is proposing to double the province's oil production
- The move directly conflicts with federal climate commitments and carbon pricing regulations
- Alberta's energy sector is a cornerstone of the provincial economy, but expansion plans face regulatory and environmental scrutiny

The Flashpoint

- Is this economic courage or a reckless bet against the climate—and do you think Alberta's plan has a real shot at happening?

■ Argentina accuses UK warship of military incursion near Falklands

The Angle: Hours after a World Cup clash between the two nations, Argentina's government is escalating rhetoric over a British naval vessel operating near the disputed Falkland Islands—reigniting a decades-old territorial standoff that still runs hot on both sides.

- Argentina's foreign minister issued an official statement saying the government "firmly rejects this British military incursion into areas under Argentine jurisdiction"
- The accusation came hours after a World Cup match between Argentina and the UK
- The dispute centers on the Falkland Islands, territory claimed by Argentina but controlled by Britain since 1982

The Tinderbox Question

- Do you think post-game emotions between these two countries made this confrontation worse, or is this just the same old feud finding a new excuse?

TRENDING TODAY

■ Trump takes 2020 election grievances to primetime Thursday

The Angle: Six years after losing the 2020 election, Trump is giving a major national address where he's signaled he'll rehash unproven claims about voting machines and Republican losses. It's a tell about where his head is at heading into 2024—and whether he's learned anything about moving forward.

- Trump is delivering a primetime address Thursday night
- He's said the speech will focus on elections and voting machines
- This follows 6 years of Trump repeatedly pushing unproven claims about his 2020 loss
- The address suggests he may revisit claims about Republican losses beyond his own race

The Real Question

- Is Trump genuinely concerned about election integrity, or is he still stuck relitigating his own defeat—and does that matter for what voters think right now?

■ Sam Neill, Hollywood Icon, Dead at 77

The Angle: The acclaimed New Zealand actor—best known for Jurassic Park, The Piano, and decades of film and TV work—has died from pneumonia. His passing marks the loss of one of cinema's most respected character actors, and fans worldwide are remembering his legacy.

- Sam Neill, legendary New Zealand actor, died from pneumonia
- His agent confirmed the death to The Associated Press on Thursday
- A private family memorial will be held at his farm in New Zealand

The Tribute Moment

- What's your favorite Sam Neill role—Jurassic Park, The Piano, or something deeper in his catalog?

CLOSER: THE KICKER/GOODBYES (franchise fallback)

■ Heartstopper wraps with a feel-good London premiere sendoff

The Angle: Netflix's beloved LGBTQ+ coming-of-age series is saying goodbye with a final film, and the cast gathered in London to celebrate what became a cultural moment for a generation of viewers. It's the kind of story that lands different depending on whether you grew up with these characters.

- Kit Connor and Joe Locke led the cast at the world premiere of Heartstopper Forever at London's Cineworld on Tuesday night
- Netflix's dress code for the event was 'Your best self — however that looks to you' — setting a tone that matched the show's wholesome, inclusive vibe
- The film marks the end of the beloved Heartstopper franchise, with the cast doing a post-screening Q&A at Leicester Square

The Nostalgia Check-In

- Did Heartstopper matter to you, or is this one of those shows that totally passed you by—and if so, what's the deal?

■■ Why socialism is suddenly not a political death sentence

The Angle: For generations, calling yourself a socialist was electoral poison in North America. Now it's one of the fastest-growing political identities—and it's reshaping how younger voters think about politics and policy. This matters because it signals a real generational shift in what's politically viable.

- 'Socialism' has shifted from a political liability to one of the fastest-growing political identities in recent years, particularly among younger voters
- Democratic socialism has deep historical roots in both the U.S. and Canada, but was largely dormant or stigmatized for decades during the Cold War and after

- The resurgence reflects changing attitudes toward capitalism, inequality, and what voters expect government to provide

The Label Test

- Would you call yourself a socialist, and does the word mean something totally different to you than it did to your parents' generation?

ON-AIR BIT BREAKDOWN

- Step 1: The Word Association - First 90 seconds -> Hosts each free-associate what 'democratic socialism' means to them personally—without Googling or overthinking—then compare notes on how their instincts differ from Cold War-era definitions
- Step 2: The Generation Divide - Phone lines / social -> Call out to listeners: Did your parents' generation recoil at the word 'socialism'? Do you and your peers see it totally differently? Share one policy you associate with it.
- Step 3: The Viable Candidate Test - Quick wrap -> Hosts debate: Would you vote for a candidate who proudly owned the 'democratic socialist' label, or does the word still carry baggage in a real election?

■ Iran draws hard line over Strait of Hormuz control

■ Breakout potential (editorial judgment, below the usual engagement bar): Iran's Strait of Hormuz warning is a geopolitical flashpoint with immediate market/energy implications and global security consequences that typically trigger downstream coverage surge.
The Angle: Iran is escalating rhetoric around one of the world's most critical shipping chokepoints, where roughly a third of global oil passes through. This is the kind of geopolitical tension that hits gas prices and supply chains everywhere—and it's heating up right now.

- Iran has declared the Strait of Hormuz a 'red line' and says it will resist until the end
- The Strait of Hormuz is a critical global shipping route where roughly one-third of the world's seaborne oil passes through
- The warning comes amid ongoing US-Iran tensions and regional instability in the Middle East

The Pinch Point

- How much does Iran actually control what happens in that strait, and what does a real confrontation there mean for your wallet at the pump?

■ Sam Neill, Jurassic Park legend, dead at 78

■ Breakout potential (editorial judgment, below the usual engagement bar): Sam Neill's death is a major cultural moment for a beloved actor with significant fanbase, and cause-of-death reveals typically see delayed engagement spikes as people discover and share the news.
The Angle: The New Zealand actor who defined a generation of blockbuster cinema—from Jurassic Park to The Piano—has died. A major cultural moment for anyone who grew up in the '90s and beyond.

- Sam Neill, the iconic star of Jurassic Park and The Piano, has died at 78 years old
- Neill was a prolific actor across film, television, and theater, with a career spanning decades across Hollywood and international productions
- The New Zealand-born actor became a household name through major franchises and award-winning dramatic roles

The Nostalgia Hit

- What's your Sam Neill moment—Jurassic Park, or something deeper from his career?
