"Asking rents in Canada fall more than 4% from last year, according to report"

After nearly two years of falling rents across Canada, renters are finally catching a break—but the relief isn't hitting everywhere equally.

Key Facts:

- Canada has now seen 21 consecutive months of year-over-year rent declines
- Asking rents fell more than 4% from the previous year
- British Columbia and Ontario saw the biggest drops
- Atlantic Canada rents rose while other regions fell

Talking Points:

- Why are BC and Ontario seeing the steepest drops when they've been the most expensive markets?
- Atlantic Canada bucking the trend—what's driving rents up there while the rest of the country cools?

"New Study Says Parents' Phone Use Might Be Giving Kids Attachment Issues Later On"

New research suggests parental phone distraction could be affecting how kids bond with their parents long-term.

Key Facts:

- Study links parents' phone use to potential attachment problems in children
- Research suggests this is nuanced—not a blanket indictment of parental device use

Talking Points:

- What does 'attachment issues' actually mean in developmental psychology?
- Is this about screen time limits, or something deeper about presence and attention?

"More and More Lampposts in California, New York, and Connecticut Will Soon Charge EVs"

Your neighborhood lamppost could become your EV charging station—and three states are making it happen.

Key Facts:

- Voltpost is converting existing lampposts into EV charging points.
- California, New York, and Connecticut are deploying the solution.
- The approach repurposes existing electrical infrastructure rather than requiring new installations.

Talking Points:

- Using existing infrastructure cuts installation costs dramatically vs. building new charging stations.
- Makes EV charging accessible to apartment dwellers and renters without dedicated parking.
