TODAY'S RUNDOWN SLOTS

THE LIST (6 stories)

■■ El-Sayed refuses to answer questions about Muslim Brotherhood letter: 'I'm not interested'

The Angle: A political interview going sideways on live TV is always good radio — especially when a candidate dodges a direct question instead of just answering it, which only makes people more curious about what's in that letter.

- The interview happened on Fox News' "Special Report" with host Bret Baier.
- Baier pressed El-Sayed about a 2012 letter addressed to the leader of the Muslim Brotherhood in Egypt.
- El-Sayed's name was signed on that letter.
- Instead of answering, he repeatedly interrupted Baier and said flatly: "I'm not interested."

The Debate Starter

- When a candidate refuses to answer a direct question on live TV, is that a red flag or just smart defense — call in and tell us which.

■ Sacha Baron Cohen says Donald Trump has "elements of brilliance" and that he was re-elected president because "we were too easy to dismiss h

The Angle: A-list comedian Sacha Baron Cohen just handed the media a soundbite — calling Trump "brilliant" while promoting his new movie — and it's the kind of backhanded compliment that'll split any room right down the middle.

- Sacha Baron Cohen is on the press tour for his new film "Ali G: Who Iz I?", out in theaters today
- His quote: "There are elements of brilliance to him... that explains his appeal"
- He admits the media underestimated Trump: "We were too easy to dismiss him as a nincompoop"
- On Pivot with Kara Swisher and Scott Galloway, he added Trump uses comedy intentionally — calling it "a huge amount of comedy in the way he speaks"

The Debate Starter

- Is calling Trump "brilliant" a compliment, an insult, or just the smartest way to sell movie tickets right now?

■ Etsy to restrict AI-generated content in effort to combat seller slop

The Angle: Etsy built its whole brand on human-made, one-of-a-kind crafts - so a crackdown on AI-generated "slop" flooding the marketplace hits right at the platform's identity and has shoppers and sellers both picking sides.

- Etsy is moving to restrict AI-generated content on its platform
- The stated goal is cutting down on so-called "seller slop" - low-effort, mass-produced AI listings crowding out real handmade goods
- Etsy's entire brand promise has long been human-made, unique items, making this a identity-defining policy shift

The Debate Starter

- Can you even tell AI-made from handmade anymore - and should platforms like Etsy be the ones policing it?

■■ Local opposition helped stop Amazon's plans for four data centers in Northern Virginia. Most of the 122 acre site would instead be rezoned for homes and mixed use, with 25 acres donated for a community arts and recreation center and $5 million for the county housing fund.

The Angle: This taps into the massive national backlash against AI data centers eating up land and power — and it's the rare story where the little guy actually beat Big Tech. Everyone's got an opinion on data centers popping up near them right now.

- Local opposition blocked Amazon's plan to build four data centers on a 122-acre site in Northern Virginia
- Most of the land will be rezoned for homes and mixed-use development instead
- 25 acres are being donated for a community arts and recreation center
- The deal includes $5 million for the county's housing fund

The Debate Starter

■ Wolves roam into Finnish villages after Google destroys 1,300 acres of forest for AI data centers

The Angle: This is the AI infrastructure story with teeth — literally. The rush to build data centers for AI is now showing up as displaced wildlife wandering into neighborhoods, which makes the abstract 'AI has environmental costs' debate suddenly very visual and very real.

- Google reportedly cleared about 1,300 acres of forest in Finland to make room for AI data centers
- With their habitat gone, wolves are now showing up inside nearby villages
- The story's gaining traction as a stark symbol of the hidden environmental cost of the AI data center boom

The Debate Starter

■ Google quietly changes privacy policy so your Gmail and Photos could be used in targeted ads

The Angle: Gmail and Google Photos are default apps for basically everyone with a smartphone, so a quiet privacy policy shift letting that personal content fuel targeted ads is the kind of "wait, what?" story that gets people checking their own settings mid-show.

- Story centers on Google reportedly updating its privacy policy language around how data is used for ad targeting.
- The change reportedly touches Gmail and Google Photos - two of the most widely used personal data apps on the planet.
- Framed as a "quiet" change - no big announcement, just a policy update users have to notice themselves.

The Trust Buster

- Would you actually switch email providers over this, or is "Google already knows everything" just the deal we've all made peace with?

■ China's head transplant advocate Ren Xiaoping completes landmark spinal surgery in Russia

The Angle: This is the guy who's been chasing full head transplants for years, and now he's notched a 'landmark' spinal procedure overseas — it's a flashpoint for the ethics-vs-innovation debate everyone loves to argue about.

- Ren Xiaoping, a Chinese surgeon known as a leading head transplant advocate, reportedly completed the procedure
- The surgery is being described as a landmark spinal surgery
- It took place in Russia, not China
- Ren has long pushed head-transplant research as a serious medical frontier, not sci-fi

■ California startup says it has injected AI-designed virus into humans

The Angle: This is the kind of story that sounds like sci-fi until you realize it's real — a company claims they used AI to design a virus from scratch and then put it in a person, which raises huge questions about safety, regulation, and whether we're moving too fast on bioengineering.

- A California-based startup claims it has designed a virus using AI and injected it into human subjects.
- Few details are public yet on the startup's name, the virus's purpose, or what regulatory oversight (if any) was involved.
- The claim is circulating widely on Reddit's r/futurology, sparking immediate debate over verification and ethics.

The Debate Starter

■ Trump says deal with Canada close, but he holds 'all the cards'

The Angle: Any update on US-Canada trade talks hits wallets on both sides of the border, and Trump's "I hold all the cards" line is the kind of swagger that gets people talking about who actually has leverage here.

- Trump says a deal with Canada is close
- He claims he's holding "all the cards" in the negotiation
- Story surfaced out of r/canada, signaling it's already got Canadians talking

■ Trump staffer Britt McHenry forced to resign over NBA scuffle after being promoted on the same day

The Angle: A Trump administration staffer and former ESPN anchor getting pushed out over a courtside scuffle — on the very same day she got bumped up — is exactly the kind of political-meets-pop-culture whiplash that gets phones lighting up.

- Britt McHenry — former ESPN/Fox News personality now working as a Trump staffer — was reportedly forced to resign.
- The exit was tied to a scuffle at an NBA game.
- The twist: she had reportedly just been promoted that same day before the fallout hit.

■ 'The Daily Show' Embarrasses Trump Supporters Who Can't Define Communism for Jordan Klepper

The Angle: Jordan Klepper's field pieces are basically a franchise at this point — put a mic in front of someone confident about their politics and ask them to define the term they're using, and you get the kind of squirming clip that rockets around Reddit and TikTok every time.

- Jordan Klepper, The Daily Show's go-to field correspondent for these 'gotcha' interviews, is behind the segment
- The bit centers on Trump supporters struggling to give a basic definition of communism on camera
- Framed by the outlet as an 'embarrassing' moment for the interviewees — exactly the kind of clip built for social sharing

The Debate Starter

- Could you define communism, socialism, and capitalism on the spot right now — no Googling?

■ Loblaw CEO apologizes to 2 million shoppers for personal data hack, offers free credit monitoring

The Angle: If you've got a PC Optimum card, this one's personal — Canada's biggest grocery chain is apologizing to roughly 2 million customers after a data breach, and now they're scrambling to make it right.

- Loblaw's CEO personally apologized to shoppers over the breach.
- About 2 million customers had their personal data exposed.
- The hack happened earlier this year, but the apology is landing now.
- Loblaw is offering affected shoppers free credit monitoring.

The Angle: Our own PM just accused someone — maybe Musk, maybe the White House — of quietly throttling Ukraine's war-tracking tech, and he's blaming it directly for deaths. That's Carney picking a very public fight on the world stage.

- Mark Carney says a slowdown in Ukraine's Starshield access has caused "real consequences, human consequences, direct casualties"
- Volodymyr Zelenskyy says the restriction means Ukraine can't track drones and missiles moving faster than 160 km/h
- Carney cited a Russian strike on central Kyiv in the prior 36 hours as proof attacks are "becoming more and more indiscriminate"

■ Convicted murderer should be banned from McGill campus for rest of academic year, students say

The Angle: A student petition is calling for a convicted murderer to be kept off McGill's campus for the rest of the school year — a story that taps into real anxiety about campus safety versus reintegration after a conviction.

- Students at McGill University are demanding a convicted murderer be banned from campus through the rest of the academic year.
- The push is being driven by student concerns over safety, not a university administration decision.

The Debate Starter

- Does someone with a murder conviction get a path back into student life — or should campus just be off-limits, full stop?

■ You Only Audition Twice: Watch Henry Cavill, James Brolin, Sam Neill and Others Screen-Test for James Bond - The Hollywood Reporter

The Angle: With a new crop of actors reportedly screen-testing at Pinewood for Amazon's Bond reboot under Denis Villeneuve, it's the perfect excuse to revisit the wild list of stars who auditioned for 007 and didn't get the tux.

- Henry Cavill, James Brolin, and Sam Neill are among the names who actually screen-tested for James Bond — and all walked away without the role
- New hopefuls are reportedly screen-testing right now at Pinewood Studios for the next 007
- Amazon execs and director Denis Villeneuve are said to be driving the new Bond search

The Debate Starter

- Of the actors who almost played Bond, which one would you have actually wanted in the role?

ON-AIR BIT BREAKDOWN

- Step 1: Almost-Bond Lineup - 60 seconds, quickfire -> Host reads off a near-Bond name (Cavill, Brolin, Neill) and co-host has to guess which movie-era they'd have fit, no googling
- Step 2: Recast the Role - The big debate -> Each host picks their dream 'what if' Bond from the almost-list and makes a 30-second case for why that version would've worked

■ A virus that infected chimps (but not humans) 4 million years ago left DNA that switches off a gene helping young brain cells grow and connect. Turning it off in lab-grown human mini-brains stunted neurons, and using CRISPR to remove the viral DNA from chimp stem cells switched the gene back on.

The Angle: Scientists just found that leftover virus DNA from 4 million years ago controls a gene tied to brain cell growth — and it's one of the clues to what actually separates human brains from chimp brains. It's the kind of mind-bending science story that makes people go 'wait, WHAT?' on social.

- A virus infected chimp ancestors roughly 4 million years ago and left behind DNA that's still sitting in their genome today
- That ancient viral DNA switches off a gene that helps young brain cells grow and connect
- Researchers turned it off in lab-grown human mini-brains — and it stunted neuron development
- Using CRISPR to snip the viral DNA out of chimp stem cells flipped that brain-growth gene back on
