THE LIST (2 stories)

■ Google's AI watermark works—but is it enough?

The Angle: Google's new SynthID tool can reliably spot AI-generated images, but researchers warn that labeling fake content might be a losing battle as deepfakes get smarter. It's a cat-and-mouse game that could reshape how we trust what we see online.

- Google developed SynthID, a watermarking system that successfully identifies AI-generated images
- Testing shows the technology works well in lab conditions, but real-world deployment raises questions about scalability
- Researchers warn that as AI generation improves, labeling systems may struggle to keep pace with increasingly convincing fakes
- The challenge highlights a fundamental problem: detecting AI content may ultimately prove harder than creating it

The Trust Question

- If AI gets better faster than we can label it, how do we even know what's real anymore—and who bears the responsibility?

■ WestJet flight attendants threaten major strike action

The Angle: Canada's second-largest airline is facing a potential shutdown after unions served 72-hour strike notice—this could disrupt travel across the country and puts pressure on management to negotiate fast.

- WestJet flight attendants' union has issued a 72-hour strike notice
- This is a major labor action threatening service at Canada's second-largest airline
- The move signals contract negotiations have stalled between the union and airline management

The Traveler's Trigger

- If you're flying WestJet in the next week, should you be panicking right now—or do these unions usually reach a deal at the last second?

TRENDING TODAY

■ Justice Department went nuclear on James Comey, lawyers claim

The Angle: Former FBI director James Comey's legal team is alleging the government pulled out all the stops to build a case against him—including tracking his phone and even interviewing a Mafia underboss who confessed to 19 murders. It's a stunning claim about how far feds will go against one of their own.

- James Comey's lawyers claim the Justice Department used the Secret Service and FBI to pursue an unusually aggressive investigation against him.

- The government allegedly interviewed Sammy 'The Bull' Gravano, a Mafia underboss who has admitted to participating in 19 killings, as part of the case.
- Comey's legal team says authorities allegedly tracked his phone as part of the investigation.

The WTF Moment

- How far should the government go to prosecute a former top official—and what does it say that they'd interview a confessed mob killer to do it?

■■ Spider-Man swings into China's biggest superhero opening in seven years

The Angle: Hollywood's been struggling to crack the Chinese box office lately, but Spider-Man just shattered expectations with a $35 million opening day and projections north of $250 million total — a sign that maybe superhero movies are finally getting their mojo back in the world's second-biggest film market.

- Spider-Man: Brand New Day earned over $35 million on its first day in China
- Local analysts are projecting the film could earn as much as $250 million total during its full run
- This marks China's biggest superhero opening in seven years, a major milestone after Hollywood struggled in that market recently

The Recovery Question

- Has Hollywood finally figured out how to make superhero movies that work for Chinese audiences, or is this just a Spider-Man thing?

■ Alberta's new rule: employers foot the bill for 65-plus workers

The Angle: Alberta is shifting a major employment cost onto businesses this fall—employers now have to cover health insurance for workers over 65. It's a move that could reshape retirement decisions and hiring practices across the province.

- Starting this fall, Alberta employers will be required to cover the cost of health insurance for employees over age 65
- The change applies to workers who would normally age out of provincial coverage eligibility

The Ripple Effect

- If you're planning to work past 65, or you're hiring older workers, how does this shift change the equation for you?

■ Sixth death in NYC Legionnaires outbreak hits Upper East Side

The Angle: A deadly Legionnaires' disease outbreak in Manhattan has now killed six people and sickened 90 since early July. Health officials are still investigating the source, raising questions about what's spreading through the city's water systems and what residents should watch for.

- Six people have died in the Upper East Side Legionnaires outbreak
- 90 people total have been sickened since the outbreak was first identified in early July
- Six people remain hospitalized, according to NYC health department

The Health Alert

- Have you or anyone you know experienced symptoms in that area, or are you worried about water safety in your own building?

■ Richard Gere's Son Shoots Film With Cindy Crawford's Daughter

The Angle: Three decades after their parents' high-profile split, Homer Gere and Kaia Gerber are working together on a movie—and he's calling it "really funny" that their famous exes are now connected through their kids on set. It's one of those only-in-Hollywood full-circle moments.

- Homer Gere (son of Richard Gere) and Kaia Gerber (daughter of Cindy Crawford) are co-starring in the film 'The Shards'
- Richard Gere and Cindy Crawford were married from 1991 to 1995—ending roughly 30 years ago
- Homer called the pairing "really funny" in recent remarks about the collaboration

The Watercooler Moment

- Have you ever ended up working with someone whose parents used to date your parents—and how awkward was that first day?

■ The web is being redesigned for machines, not people

The Angle: AI is now the primary consumer of the internet – it's reading, learning, and pulling data from websites that were originally built for human eyes. That shift is reshaping how the web works and raising real questions about what's left for actual readers.

- AI systems now answer questions and carry out tasks that humans traditionally did themselves – from planning itineraries to preparing research
- The web is increasingly becoming a space where machines, rather than humans, go to learn things
- This fundamental redesign raises questions about the future of the human-centred web and how information gets distributed

The Reality Check

- Do you feel like the web is already getting harder to navigate because it's optimized for bots instead of you – and should we actually care?

■■ Canadian woman accused of spying at NATO headquarters

The Angle: A Canadian citizen has been identified in connection with espionage at NATO's military command center—a rare security breach that raises serious questions about how intelligence operatives infiltrate allied defense infrastructure and what it means for continental security.

- CBC has identified a Canadian woman accused of spying activities at NATO military headquarters
- The case involves alleged espionage at a major allied defense installation
- Details of the accusation and her alleged role remain under investigation

The National Security Question

- How does a Canadian citizen end up accused of spying for a foreign power inside NATO—and what does this tell us about the gaps in our own security vetting?

■■ Montreal homeowners flooded three years straight—what changed?

The Angle: A Montreal woman's home stayed dry for 40 years. Now her basement's underwater three years running. It's a snapshot of how climate change and aging city infrastructure are reshaping where flooding happens—and it's affecting regular homeowners' insurance, resale value, and whether they can even stay in their neighborhoods.

- A Montreal-area homeowner experienced no flooding for 40 years, then saw her basement fill with water three consecutive years
- Experts point to heavier rainfall patterns, aging infrastructure, and urban development as converging culprits
- Climate adaptation will require more than one solution, suggesting city-wide policy and infrastructure overhaul ahead

The Watercooler Shift

- Have you noticed weird weather patterns hitting your neighborhood that never used to? Call in—where are you seeing climate change show up in your own backyard?

■■ England's heatwaves killed nearly 3,000 people in two months

The Angle: Britain just experienced its deadliest May and June on record due to extreme heat, raising urgent questions about climate resilience and vulnerable populations as extreme weather becomes the new normal across the Northern Hemisphere.

- 2,877 excess deaths in England during May and June linked directly to heatwaves
- 753 deaths recorded in May alone
- 2,124 deaths in June, which featured a rare red heat warning — the UK's highest alert level

The Reality Check

- Are heat-related deaths getting the same urgent attention as other public health crises, or are we treating extreme weather like it's just bad luck instead of a pattern we need to prepare for?
