THE LIST (1 stories)

■ Trump mulls selling F-35s to Turkey—and breaking U.S. law

The Angle: A NATO ally has been locked out of America's most advanced stealth fighter for years—but Trump is eyeing a reversal that could reshape the alliance and anger Congress. It's defense policy as high-stakes dealmaking.

- Trump is considering selling F-35 fighter jets to Turkey, a NATO ally
- Current U.S. law bans such sales to Turkey
- Turkey has been denied access to the world's most advanced stealth fighter for years
- Reversing the ban would require Trump to override existing legislation

The Foreign Policy Flash Point

- Should the U.S. sell its most classified military tech to an ally Trump personally wants to court—or does Congress have a point keeping it locked down?

TRENDING TODAY

■ Justin Baldoni breaks silence on Blake Lively legal fight

The Angle: The It Ends With Us director finally addresses the messy lawsuit that dominated Hollywood gossip for two years—and both sides are still pointing fingers over who wronged whom. It's a rare public statement after months of quiet.

- Justin Baldoni posted a nearly five-minute video breaking silence on the legal battle with Blake Lively that wrapped earlier this year
- His wife Emily Baldoni said they've "had to wrestle with so many things" over the last two years, questioning "how could something like this even happen?"
- Emily added the conflict felt "disguised as a fight for women," suggesting the dispute was framed differently than its actual nature

The Unresolved Drama

- Two huge stars, a lawsuit that just ended, and we're STILL not getting a clear story of who did what to whom—are you team Blake or is there more to Baldoni's side?

■ Canada's job market edges forward despite economic headwinds

The Angle: Canada added 18,000 jobs in June and unemployment dipped slightly to 6.5%, signaling some resilience in the labor market even as Canadians face persistent cost-of-living pressures. It's a mixed signal—modest growth, but nothing that suggests the economy is firing on all cylinders.

- Canada added 18,000 jobs in June
- Unemployment rate fell to 6.5 per cent from 6.6 per cent in May
- The job gains come as Canadians continue to grapple with inflation and housing affordability pressures

The Reality Check

- Is a job gain of 18,000 in a country of 40 million actually good news, or just proof the economy's stuck in neutral?

LIFESTYLE CHAT

■ Ontario health-care layoffs hit amid nurse shortage crisis

The Angle: Healthcare workers are being cut at the exact moment Ontario is screaming for more nurses and doctors. The union's raising the alarm—this is the kind of contradiction that affects real wait times and patient care for anyone who needs a hospital.

- Hundreds of health-care jobs being cut in Ontario according to union reports
- The cuts are happening while the province faces ongoing nurse shortages
- Union raising concerns that layoffs will worsen already-strained health-care capacity

The Friction Point

- Why are we cutting hospital jobs when emergency rooms can't find enough nurses to cover shifts—have you or someone you know felt that shortage firsthand?

■ WHO warns cancer cases could double by 2050—here's the real issue

The Angle: The World Health Organization just dropped a sobering report: cancer cases are about to skyrocket globally, but it's not just about disease progression—it's a story about inequality. Wealthy countries are getting better at treating cancer while poorer regions are getting left behind, and that gap is widening fast.

- World Health Organization released a report Wednesday projecting annual cancer cases will rise considerably by 2050
- The WHO highlighted that global health care inequities are driving both more cases and more deaths
- The report tempered optimism about cancer treatment improvements, suggesting gains are unevenly distributed across wealthy and developing nations

The Reality Check

- If cancer survival rates are improving in rich countries, why is the global picture getting worse—and what does that say about who gets left behind?

■ The Male Feminist Paradox—What's Really Going On?

The Angle: A viral social-media moment is sparking the age-old debate: are performative male feminists actually allies, or just another flavor of the same old problem? It's hitting a nerve because it taps into real frustration about who's actually doing the work.

- The post "Never trust a male feminist" has gone viral on X/Twitter, racking up significant engagement across the platform
- The tweet links to a longer thread or article exploring inconsistency between stated feminist values and actual behavior
- The conversation is part of a broader cultural reckoning about performative activism and authenticity in social movements

The Hot Take

- Is calling out 'male feminists' fair criticism of performative activism, or unfair gatekeeping of who gets to support gender equality?

ON-AIR BIT BREAKDOWN

- Step 1: Define the Archetype - First 2 minutes -> Hosts paint a picture: What does a 'performative male feminist' actually look like in 2024? Social-media poster? Guy who talks the talk? Ask callers for their realest examples.
- Step 2: The Defense - Next 3 minutes -> Flip it—play advocate for genuinely supportive men: Can men ever be real allies, or is the whole category suspect by definition? Get a caller or two to make the case.
- Step 3: The Trust Test - Final 2 minutes -> Quick lightning round: Hosts ask—what would a man actually have to do to earn your trust on this? Actions, not words. Real answers only.

■ AR glasses under 300 bucks—ready for prime time?

The Angle: Augmented reality has been the 'next big thing' for years, but a $299 price tag from Xreal might finally make it real. This isn't a $3,000 Vision Pro—it's the consumer entry point people have been waiting for, and it actually works.

- X by Xreal a01+ launches at $299, undercutting premium AR headsets by thousands of dollars
- Positioned as a serious competitor in the entry-level AR market
- Designed to be lightweight enough for everyday wear, not a prototype-tier headset

The Reality Check

- If AR glasses finally hit the $300 price point, does that change whether you'd actually buy in—or does the tech still need to do more to justify wearing them?

■ Gun violence in intimate relationships surging, StatsCan warns

The Angle: A new Statistics Canada report shows firearm-related intimate partner violence has spiked over the past 14 years—a stark trend that affects safety policy and domestic violence prevention strategies across the country.

- Rates of intimate partner violence involving firearms increased significantly between 2010 and 2024, according to Statistics Canada research released Wednesday
- The data covers intimate partner violence specifically—not just general gun violence—making domestic abuse a growing firearm safety concern

The Stat That Hits Home

■ Israel tips off U.S. to Iranian assassination plot against Trump

■ Breakout potential (editorial judgment, below the usual engagement bar): Intelligence-backed assassination plot involving a sitting presidential candidate and a major geopolitical adversary has immediate political urgency and will likely dominate news cycles once it gains traction.

The Angle: This is a major international security story with immediate political weight—Israel reportedly alerted American intelligence to a credible Iranian threat on a former and potential future president. It's the kind of geopolitical flashpoint that touches on U.S.-Israel relations, Iran tensions, and election-year security all at once.

- Israel shared intelligence with the U.S. regarding an Iranian plot to assassinate Trump, according to multiple sources
- The intelligence sharing reflects ongoing U.S.-Israel coordination on Iran-related threats
- The timing coincides with heightened Iran-U.S. tensions and the current election cycle

The Straight Take

- Does an intelligence report like this change how you're thinking about the election or U.S. security right now—or is this just the baseline level of threat we're all operating under?
